Developed by Stanford University, the Healthy Lifestyles program is designed to help you change a habit or behavior of your choice in order to improve your quality of life. Classes are 75 minutes and meet every two weeks. The program is facilitated by a trained Healthy Lifestyles Coach and focuses on completion of short- and long-term goals. The goals of each participant are unique to the individual, as the focus is on behavioral change. Many participants choose to focus on exercise and nutrition-related goals. The group is confidential and designed to provide positive reinforcement and inspiration as members draw strength from one another.

Administered through the county Extension educators, the program helps people learn how to prepare food that will reduce the risk of high blood glucose.
